uſual, though her ſtrength is conſiderably diminiſhed: ſhe has not power now to move her legs without aſſiſtance, and all the parts of her body below the hips appear to her as if they were dead.

She has for ſome time paſt diſcontinued the uſe of moiſtened rag, which ſhe used to wipe her mouth with, as ſhe never feels any occaſion for it. Her mouth has always a ſufficiency of saliva to keep it in a proper ſtate of moiſture, but never ſo much as to occaſion her to ſwallow.

She cannot endure people in the room who have taken the ſmalleſt quantity of malt or ſpiritous liquors; the fumes of their breath affect her in ſuch a manner, as to cauſe a giddineſs in her head like that felt by a perſon in liquor, attended with violent ſickneſs and illneſs; yet the fumes of ſmoaking tobacco do not in the leaſt affect her.

Thus it appears, that she has not taken the leaſt particle of ſolid food ſince June 1807, nor any kind of liquids ſince October 1808.

Theſe are all the particulars that are worthy of notice, from the beginning to the preſent period of her exiſtence. Such an extraordinary inſtance has never been before eſtabliſhed with proofs ſo undeniable. This is a living fact, which continues to excite the greateſt curioſity.

FINIS.
